ISPE- HVAC.pdf | Hvac | Latent Heat

Latent heat is the energy required to change the state of a substance without changing its temperature. For example, the latent heat of fusion is the energy required to melt a solid into a liquid, and the latent heat of vaporization is the energy required to boil a liquid into a gas. The latent heat of a substance is a function of its specific heat and the change in temperature. The latent heat of a substance is also a function of its phase change. The latent heat of a substance is a function of its specific heat and the change in temperature. The latent heat of a substance is also a function of its phase change.
